SITE TELLS WHAT'S HAPPENING IN iSERIES NATION

Citizens of the iSeries Nation are getting a new perk from Big Blue. The Events page on IBM's iSeries Nation Web site gives all members of the iSeries community—users, business partners, and developers—the chance to plug their iSeries-related events, such as local user group meetings and big, international conferences such as COMMON and LinuxWorld.

IBM decided to develop and sponsor the site in response to customer requests, says Anne Lucas, project executive for IBM eServer iSeries Marketing.

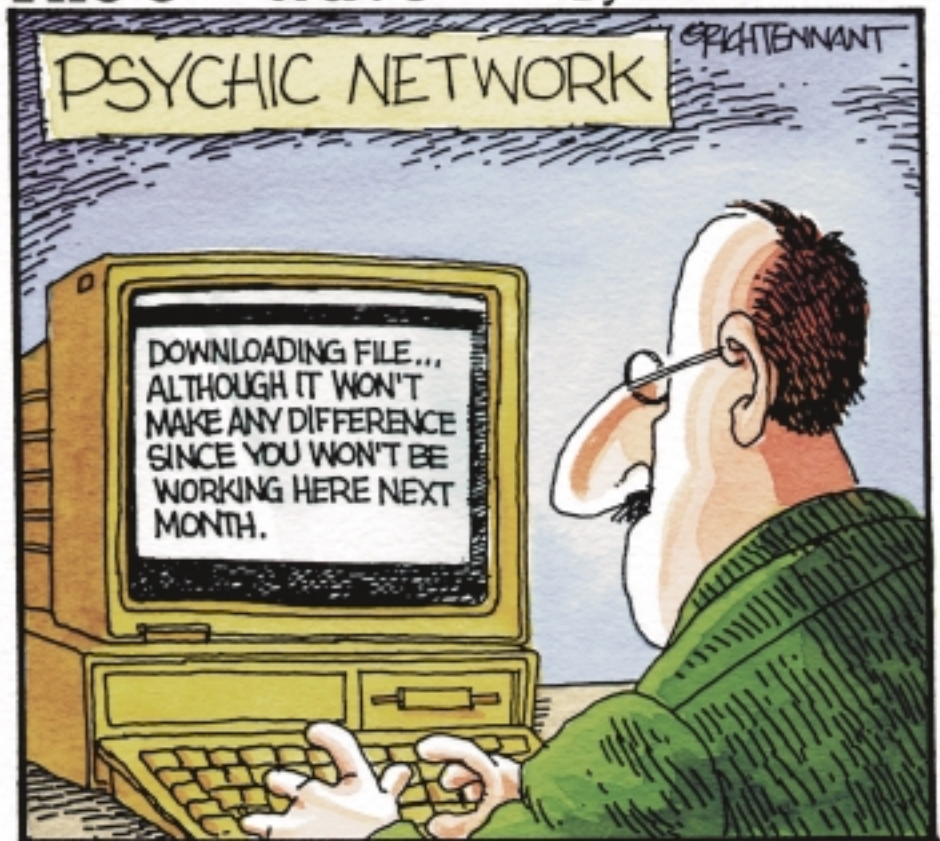

While the site is currently on the smaller side, IBM has big plans for the future, including the addition of some keyword search functionality that will make it easier for users to home in on exactly what they're looking for, Lucas says.

The newest addition to the Events page, Chatting with Citizens, lets iSeries users participate in conference calls with key IBM executives and iSeries product people, Lucas says. For more info on iSeries events or to submit your own event for the iSeries Nation Happenings site, go to:
